Dear APWU member:

The American Postal Workers Union is proud to endorse the work and benevolence of the United Way. The United Way is a volunteer-led, non-profit organization that has a network of 1,100 local agencies throughout the country. As a friend of labor, the United Way provides assistance to union members and families in need. Its direct assistance helps prevent evictions, utility cut-offs, hunger and more. But they can't do it without our continuing support. This year more than ever, with so many families in crisis because of tough economic times, the United Way needs our help.

The job crisis and unprecedented hardship have left countless working families struggling throughout America. The plight has created a critical need within our communities to serve our neighbors as they struggle to get through these difficult times.

Each of us can do our part to help those who have been less fortunate than us by volunteering our time at a United Way Agency in our area, or by making a donation to the United Way either directly or through the annual Combined Federal Campaign (CFC). Our assistance will help fund and facilitate the vital services that are so desperately needed to help people get back on their feet.

Together we can make a difference. We encourage each of you to stand united, with the United Way. Please give, advocate and volunteer.

In union solidarity,

William Burrus
President

Susan M. Carney
Human Relations Director
